Longitudinal Data Conference 2016

Powerful data

Strong evidence

Informed policy

25-27 October | National Convention Centre, Canberra, Australia

The National Centre for Longitudinal Data (NCLD) is presenting this major national conference for the first time in Australia. The conference will showcase how longitudinal data provides a powerful evidence-base for the development and assessment of national policy.

The conference streams

Powerful data	Strong evidence	Informed policy
What are industry-leading examples of longitudinal survey design and data collection, linking administrative and survey data, and data analysis?	How is longitudinal data being used in policy relevant research?	How can we best use longitudinal evidence to meet our nation's looming policy challenges?

Who should attend?

Anyone with an interest in developing and using evidence to inform policy such as the Australian Government, state and territory governments, policy-makers and influencers, academics, researchers, leaders in data technologies, private businesses and the not-for-profit sector.

A call for abstracts to present or facilitate a workshop is now open with abstracts due on 31 May 2016.
